Grey towers of Durham
Yet well I love thy mixed and massive piles
Half Church of God, half castle 'gainst the Scot
And long to roam these venerable aisles
With records stored of deeds long since forgot.

The significance of Symeon

Symeon of Durham was an English Chronicler and Benedictine Monk of Durham Priory. Having entered the monastery at Jarrow as a youth, the order was relocated to Durham in 1074. He became so enamoured with the cathedral's striking peninsula position he wrote, "To see Durham is to see the English Sion and by doing so one may save oneself a trip to Jerusalem."

Symeon rose to become precentor (choir master) of the priory. He is credited with writing two major chronicles - the Historia Ecclesiae Dunelmensis (a history of the See of Durham from its establishment at Lindisfarne in 635 to 1096) and the Historia Regum - "History of the Kings"- which begins at the point where the Ecclesiastical History by the Venerable Bede ends.

Chronicles are continuous historical accounts of events arranged in order of time without analysis or interpretation - composed in prose or verse. In addition to providing valuable information about the period they covered, they were used as sources by William Shakespeare and other playwrights in the later Middle Ages and the Renaissance.

Examples of Symeon's handwriting also appear in several surviving Durham books, including brief biographies of the Archbishops of York and the Liber Vitae, the so-called 'Cantor's Book' whose text he would have had to keep up to date as part of his duties as precentor.
